LIFE ON THE ROAD

Including excerpts from H.C. Pearson's Diary

The pioneer families who cast their lot on the Road and stayed (for eighty years or longer) were:

Before 1891: Henry and Meta Haase (mentioned earlier)

1892: Benedict and Lina

Thurnher (Turner)

1892: Henry and Lucy Boge 1892: Henry and Polly

Pearson

December 2, 1891: Benedict and Lina Thurnher bought George Graham's place, one-hundred sixty acres. This was a wonderful homestead along the very crest of the hill, above the southwestern side of the Road. High above the rest of the homesteads soft winds blew daily and quiet prevailed. Quiet, unless of course, you discount the screeching of Gladys Pearson and Lydia Thurnher when they got caught slipping out the upstairs window to go to a barn dance. But that happened at a later time.

Thurnher's were quiet, hard-working people, good people who eventually had four children.

May 5, 1892: Henry C. Pearson, a young, upperclass English bachelor, bought eighty acres on the Road. A year later he sent for his new bride, Polly, who was his family's maid back in England. Perhaps it was not wise for upper and lower classes to marry in a time when people were influenced by the fact.

Now Pearson's pioneer life began in earnest. Absolutely no money, no tools, no stock, an old, small house - - -.

But survive they did, because they were people to whom home meant everything. They were tenacious. Henry faithfully kept a diary for many years in which he recorded events and the passing time, as well as his bookkeeping.

1892: Henry John and Ursella Schunk (Lucy) Boge came from Illinois with Henry's family. This couple settled on a farm east of Haase's. Henry, born February 1I, 1858, was thirty-four years old and Lucy, born 1862, was thirty. They were young, strong, and excited about starting a new life here.

1892: "What an unbelievably hot summer, and then, lots of snow in December."

The Road was still barely a wagon trail winding from farm to farm, mostly bordered on either side by a huge, dense forest or burned-over brush land. Occasionally, small, hard-earned clearings force the forests back, and reveal the industry and dreams of each pioneer family.

How unique these people were. They and their families mostly stood alone, created a home, kept themselves well, planned and worked for the future, thought independently and were set in their ways. They were agitated, interested in, and opinionated about government, schools, and their neighbors doings. Their need was for space, time, and freedom to make their own choices. They survived.

Most of their days were spent alone. Although their psychological
